Hence we need to translate from one to the other. Home .Q: Javascript: $.each(..) with async: false - Getting the wrong elements in a array? I have an array that is fetched from the database via an AJAX call with the following code: data = DB.data.output; //Fetching the data var clean_data = $.map(data, function (n) { return n.data; });
$(function () { myData = clean_data; //Inserting the data in the array console.log(myData); //Printing the array out to the console });
I then process the array and get the results I want using the following code: $(".a").each(function () { //Getting the result //Procesing the data });
However, when the clean_data array is first printed the the console in a format like so: ["05-06-2014", "07-06-2014", "08-06-2014"]
Then, when the each loop runs, it displays the wrong data. The output is displaying the last date in the array instead of the first. The console prints it out like this: ["08-06-2014"]
Any ideas of how I can stop this? A: You need to call $.each method on the object myData, not clean_data
$(".a").each(function () { //Getting the result //Procesing the data });
A: As its a jQuery object, jQuery.each() is being executed on it. It doesn't know you want to iterate over array clean_data
