Stravinsky was not a particularly great musical theatre master, but after reading the opening lines of his opera, he decided to try recording a version, in order to be able to show the audience how wonderful Stravinsky was. While the version onstage didn't capture everything that Stravinsky thought Stravinsky was capable of—the lyrics are pretty much a rehash of Stravinsky's own "I wish I was a dinosaur!" song—it does offer a rare glimpse into the true personality of one of literature's more brilliant composers. - Stephen Tully, computer programmer and maths instructor. "One of the few times I've seen a computer-controlled CalcCalc program work satisfactorily is in an assignment in a class. I used to have a C-calc book for students, and one of the students told me once that, when he went to look it up, he could not find my code because he was using my code. So I thought of using my own code with him, but I didn't want to leave C-calc as a static reference, so I did not bother. I'm glad the code works, as it's so much easier to do on a computer than to remember.".. - Ian Fagan, Professor of Computer Science at Queen Mary University of London. Introduction to CalcCalc..
